The Chalfin Group Inc. (TCGI) announced that it provided advisory services to Publishing Business Systems, Inc. (PBS), its parent corporation, Niche Software Systems, Inc. (Niche), and their affiliates in a merger transaction with Digital Technology International, LLC (DTI) resulting in Niche and PBS becoming wholly-owned subsidiaries of DTI on January 31, 2007.

The agreement combines the resources and talents of two of the newspaper industry's leading and long-standing software solutions providers: DTI, recognized for robust Editorial and Advertising solutions and a strong international presence, and PBS, known throughout North America for its circulation, advertising, production and business systems. "In our review of this market, we discovered a natural, complementary fit between DTI and PBS. PBS solutions, combined with DTI offerings, will provide what every newspaper wants – a single vendor that can deliver systems for all areas of the newspaper that are connected through a visionary architecture," said DTI CEO Don Oldham.

"Together, PBS and DTI will provide innovative solutions based on a deep understanding of this market -- and will deliver them with exceptional customer service," said Ron Bernier, PBS CEO.

"This strategic acquisition will enable PBS and DTI to offer innovative industry leading solutions to the newspaper market," said Robert J. Chalfin, CEO of TCGI. "We were pleased to be able to advise PBS in this transaction and provide a positive business opportunity for both PBS and DTI." In addition, Paul Gazaleh, TCGI's Vice President, worked on this transaction.
